

Standard Hand Gestures for "The Game"

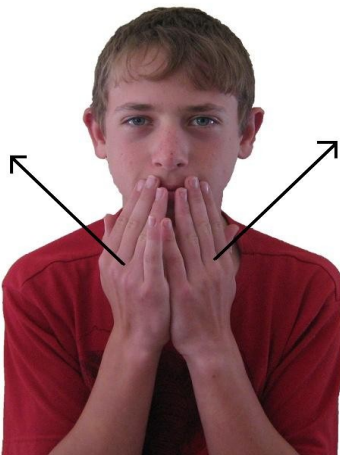

Standard hand gesture for a Book title.
Open both hands as if you were reading a book.

Standard hand gesture for a Television Show
Draw a box.

Standard hand gesture for a Movie title.
Place one hand in front of your eye like a camera lens, while the other hand moves in a circle like a 1930s movie camera.

Standard hand gesture for a Song.
Place your hands on your lips and then spread them out like an opera singer.

Standard hand gesture for the number of words in the title.

Hold up your hand with the number of words in the title indicated by the number of fingers.

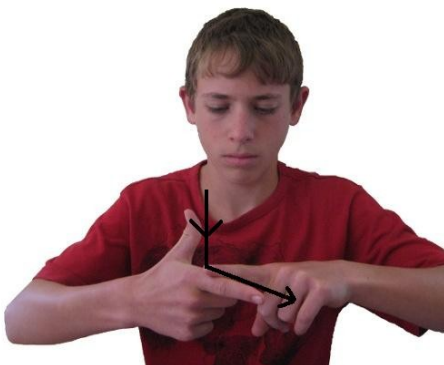

Standard hand gesture for the number of syllables in a word.

A word can also be broken down into syllables, with the total number of syllables shown by putting your fingers against your forearm.

Standard hand gesture for a little word.

Hold up two fingers with a small gap between them. This shows a small word such as "a", "an", "of", "by", etc.

Standard hand gesture for the word 'The'.

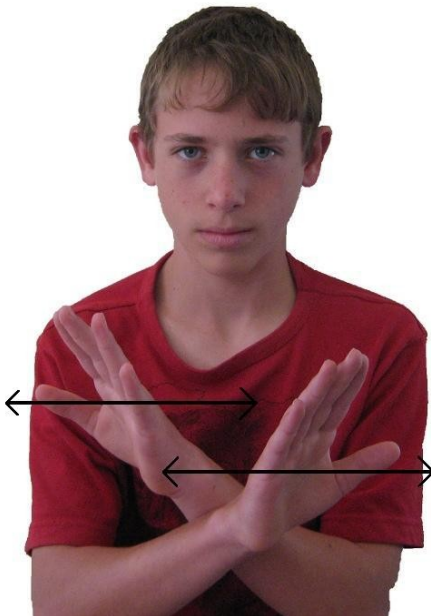

Form one hand into the shape of a pistol. Use the index finger of other hand to go down and along, drawing an 'L'.

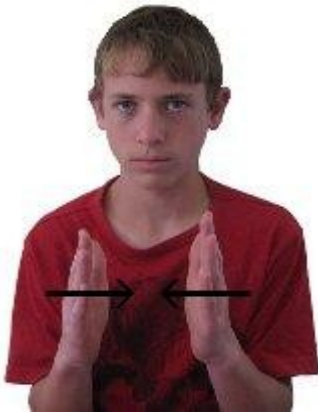

Standard hand gesture when you want to mime a word that sounds like the word you want.
Grab your ear lobe between finger and thumb and wiggle it gently.

Standard hand gesture to encourage the audience that their guesses are heading in the right direction.
Use one hand and roll it in a circle a few times.

Standard hand gesture to show the audience that their guesses are heading in the wrong direction.
Cross your hands in front of your body and wave them from side to side.

Standard hand gesture for shortening a word or syllable.

Place your hands apart but facing palm to palm. Move them from side to side.

Standard hand gesture for lengthening a word or syllable.

Place your hands apart with your thumbs pointing outwards. Move your hands from side to side.

Standard hand gesture for cutting a word in two.

Chop one hand with the other hand.

Standard hand gesture to show the audience they have guessed the word or syllable.

Tap your finger on the side of your nose.